men took part, alternating in the line, with a man leading. Their bodies were painted white and red. Good-looking, long haired girls were chosen. Every dancer carried in each hand a four-foot stick, painted red and white, and along which were fastened alternately little wooden birds painted to resemble the mountain killdeer and butterflies made of deer skin or mountain sheep skin, with feathers between. The file of dancers stepped slowly and jerkily forward in a circular course, counterclockwise, around the singer. They stooped, thrusting their sticks forward alternately with each step, piston-rod fashion. The sticks were grasped by the middle. At the "chorus" they crossed them in front.

When the Pima attended, some of their women would hang on to the sides of the dancers, men or girls, and go with them to dance in the dance space. Relatives of those dancers who had Pima companions then made gifts to the latter: necklaces, beads, shawls, blankets, and the like.[3] Finally the Pima chief would tell the Pima participants to leave off and let the dancers perform.

A clown was described in connection with this dance by Kutox, as participating in any dance by Last Star. He was an active man, carried a long pointed stick in his hand as a spear, and had his face painted or wore a mask. When he wore face paint, one half of his face was red, the other black, "to appear comical," and a headdress woven of willow twigs as a disguise. The mask sometimes worn was of cotton cloth, bag-shaped, with a long nose of cloth, and a mouth painted on it, with fringes to represent whiskers. The essential part of any costume he might wear was a strong belt: a mescal fiber rope, or of cloth. He danced violently, principally by himself, used inverted speech (but not inverted actions), and in general, tried to behave ludicrously. If he joined the ring of dancers, he would not let women grasp his hand but would jerk away. Women would lay hold of his belt trying to dance with him, but he would whirl them around. His relatives would then make presents to these women. This clown was called ʊokwutai'ʌs, an unanalyzable word.

[3] Precisely as in the Pima "name song," the begging performance mentioned above.
